This is a replica adaptation of The Kensington Bow Brooch. The real one was inherited by Queen Elizabeth II in 1953 when she was crowned the queen of England. The brooch was originally given to Princess May of Teck by the people of Kensington to mark her wedding in 1893 to the then Duke of York and future king of England George V. It comes in a Godinger silver plated jewelry / trinket box with a cushioned red velvet interior. The brooch truly sparkles once under the light, and will make a wonderful gift. The brooch itself does show a little wear on closer examination (under the loupe) but it would go unnoticed to the naked eye. The stones are glass and none are missing.
