I found these crates in a market in need of a lot of TLC and restoration.

Both crates' lids were broken but luckily I was able to save the parts where the printing was intact, which I used to make the front of the drawers and the remaining wood from the lid to use it as a shelf.

I repaired the crates and sanded them down to give them a good clean, being careful of not erasing the original printing.

I then gave them 2 coats of bees wax to protect them, while I painted the inside a vintage green to give it a fresher look.

Both crates have a lot of printing on the sides and on the top.

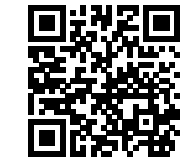

The crates are both from Argentina and Paraguay.

They show lots of signs of wear and age, but I think that adds to their character and makes them even more old. They would fit in very well with vintage tables and together they would give the room a touch of quirkiness as well as handy storage.
