Today's SACD format has been widely accepted by the audiophile community for its superb sonic qualities. Sony's DVP-S9000ES broke new ground by providing excellent video quality along with impressive SACD audio and was the first video product to carry the ES name. While the DVP-S9000ES player served us well over the years its great performance, it lacked the ability to playback the newer multi-channel SACD releases. Since then, Sony has introduced the DVP-NS900V that fills the gap by providing much of the same video performance and adjustments of the DVP-S9000ES with full multi-channel SACD playback capabilities. Although this new machine does not sport the ES badge, the sonic quality of the DVP-NS900V is excellent, with video performance very similar to that of the DVP-S9000ES.

Build Quality
The construction of the DVP-NS900V is well above average and only found on the best Sony DVD players. The all black aluminum faced unit lacks the cheap look found on the majority of today's DVD players. The front panel has tactile buttons with a refreshingly solid feel. There's also a jog wheel for both forward and reverse control of audio and video. The center of the ring has a 4-way menu control for on-screen navigation. The Video Off button turns off all the video circuitry to lower the noise floor when listening to high resolution audio. The FL Off button turns off the display, which sits right in the upper center of the unit just above the disc.
