I am a fully qualified, registered Speech and Language Therapist with over twenty years clinical experience. I mainly treat adults and teenagers. A large part of my work is treating people who have specific communication problems. These difficulties might be holding them back socially, or at work, or perhaps in interview situations. The issues I regularly treat include speech that is produced too quickly or is unclear and voices that are too quiet or generally difficult to make out. I am also often asked to assess and treat a person's non-verbal communication style. Research has shown that body language can give a false impression of a person to prospective employers etc. I also regularly treat people who have communication difficulties that result from a Stroke, or a head injury. I see patients who suffer from a progressive condition such as Parkinson's Disease, Multiple Sclerosis, Motor Neuron Disease or Dementia. Also, my caseload often includes people who have a diagnosed voice disorder or who have a.
