Fat freeze, commonly known as "Cryolipolysis," is a medical treatment used to destroy fat cells. Its principle relies on controlled cooling between -5 and -9 degrees for the non-invasive localised reduction of fat deposits in order to reshape body contours. Cryolipolysis was invented at Harvard University by Manstein (MD, PhD), and Anderson (MD), when they accidentally founded that the adipose cells within the human body can be frozen which means they cannot carry energy and more importantly cannot reproduce. Therefore as a result the lymphatic system flushes these, "dead cells," out of the body. At present, cryolipolysis has become one of the more popular methods of fat reduction as it benefits from being non surgical, non invasive and allows individuals to resume everyday activities straight after treatment.

Say no to surgery and reap the benefits of a more intelligent approach, one that blows people away without blowing the money out of their pockets.;
