Most people who take prescription medication, undergo surgeries, or even go in for yearly wellness checkups don't have a strong understanding of what goes on behind the scenes in the hospitals, doctor's offices, pharmacies, and dentist's offices where they receive care. Although they may be aware that there are certain ways to appropriately diagnose and treat the issues that come up, it's not always clear to the patient what those "best practices" are or how they might affect their health. In fact, most people don't even think about it at all and trust that their care providers are doing the right thing—until something goes wrong. <http://lane-lane>
