Independent advisers are able to select product for customers from the whole of market – that means they can potentially recommend any product from any company providing it suits the customer's needs and objectives. With such a wide choice of companies, investments and saving tools the customer can be reassured that they are not simply being provided with a standard recommendation – and are getting personalised advice. To ensure you do get personal advice your financial adviser will collect certain details about you and your circumstances to enable him to advise you. Remember to be as open and honest as you can, because the adviser's recommendation will be based on the information you provide. <http://www.financialplanning-anglia.co.uk/business>
