TimeOutCreditCards - The Story So Far (Version.1 published Sunday 29th January 2017) is the evolving story of how six credit card companies (representing nine separate credit cards) after having charged interest rates of up to 48% for over 10 years were politely asked (over a nearly two year period) to reduce their rates (they had already received in re-payments several times their outlay) which would enable the borrower to pay the cards off - All REFUSED. Usually by explaining to the borrower that they had 'risk' which they did not and they had to charge so much to cover that actual none existent financial risk. The role and purpose of these types of 'revolving credit accounts' as they apply or are utilized by our modern day credit card companies and or banks are descriptively outlined (below). Yet whilst the theory supports the activity the reality of this instance (as described in this publication), does not support their collective modern day usury. The Credit Cards Issuers / Banks being covered in this 1st edition of TimeOutCreditCards are (the company only address listed as at the beginning of the current process i.e. January/February 2014).
