many of them high rise forming the typical concrete jungle resort which attracts mainly British tourists. The beaches are impressive and spread the whole length of the resort area apart from the central marina area from where you can take part in a selection of water sports. Surprisingly in such a tourist centre you'll still see fishermen out on their small trawlers each morning y your evening meal should you frequent one of Fuengirola's seafood restaurants where the morning's catch becomes the evening speciality. No need for the less adventurous visitor to be afraid as there's plenty in the way of pub grub and fish and chip shops. You can pass many hours wandering along the long promenade along the coast stopping at the many bars and cafés. If you can cope with the climb you can visit the remains of the Moorish castle of Sohail on the western edge of the resort. Do not hesitate to contact!
