Roku is an impeccable video streaming device that enables you to stream high-quality media on your TV through your local internet connection or home WiFi network. It gives you access to thousands of movies, TV shows and live channels. The latest versions of Roku also support 4K UHD streaming. But despite of all this, your streaming experience on Roku also depends on the internet connection that you're using. Every time you watch something on Roku, you're persistently streaming high definition audio/video content in real time over the internet. So if your internet connection is slow or there's too much load on the network at any particular time, then chances are you streaming quality will suffer.

This can happen to anyone. Even if you're using the most reputed ISP in town, you never know when your internet might be going be going down. This kind of disruptions may last for several hours or even days. Of course, the best way is to call your ISP immediately but even that would take hours to finally fix the issue. But in case your internet connection is slow, there are certain things that you can try yourself to fix the issue. Following are some simple tweaks that you can try to have a better streaming experience on Roku.
