The photograph above is of my Guild D 50 NT, an instrument I've had somewhat of a relationship with since 1982. I'm almost certain that if my home was set to burn to the ground and all life was sheltered this is the thing I would backpedal into secure.

I've not generally regarded it all things considered, but rather it's extraordinary. Like practically anything worth expounding on there's an anecdote about how I came to obtain this fine guitar.

My better half and I had recently gotten hitched and, as is for the most part the case for most in that circumstance, cash was tight. I had event to go to Las Vegas to work at a public expo for an organization I was working for. I had never been to Las Vegas and never played Black Jack in my life, yet by one means or another I left with two or three thousand dollars. (The companion I was with had the great sense to take it from me and secure it a safe until we were prepared to clear out.)

When I returned home my better half demanded that I utilize the cash to get this guitar. We should not be spending that sort of cash on this buy, however I had constantly cherished the huge, profound, rich sound of the goliath D50 dreadnaught, even over the more well known and more chimier Martins.

Specialists like Johnny Cash, Mississippi John Hurt, Emmy Lou Harris, John Denver and Richie Havens made the Guild Jumbo 12 string, D50 and 55 to a great degree well known on the 70s pop scene. These guitars hand made by Guild in its Westerly, Rhode Island plant are still a portion of the best guitars at any point made. It was one of the best made in the renowned world. As the years passed, it fell on hard times and had to be restored. The guitar made the restoration of the Guild mark D50 and a patch of the guitar's body in the middle of the body.
