We know that it is great to get our wish-listed games and apps from app stores but some may not know if it worth your money and time. I got that experience when i found that a game (with nice screen shots,) is on sale from $2.99 to FREE. After install this without any hesitation, I find out that it was totally a garbage. Many developers try to lure users into install their products by “fake discount” (they set the high price and then lower price and make us think that it is a good deal to download). Thus, I will give you some suggestions to avoid this trap by using AppNaz (http://appnaz.com) to get good deal and download pure apk

How to know if an app/game really discounted and worth your spending

First of all, you should visit AppNaz to check which deals are available.

You can also use app URL to get all details about it (rating, installs, price history and developer)
Then, if you reach your wanted app, you can analyze all information to decide if it worth your money or not. You should pay much attention to price log. While other deal hunter apps ask for some premium to let you access app price history, this tool will freely give you the full statistics about price since the first release. The prices will be shown in chart or graph. I would like to use graph to compare prices and decide which is the best price to pick up any app or game.

This site is now available in more than 50 languages and currency so you can easily check app discount in different countries and compare.

Another special feature of AppNaz is that you can also download these Android games/apps to your phone and PC. It is only for android users because this is open source. These files come in apk with small notification.
