Range cookers Appliances

We are Gas Safe registered and qualified to fit electric cookers, also there is a big market for installing integrated appliances. Some fitters do not offer the same quality installation to their customer. The customer is most important and we will go the extra mile and will encourage customers back to your the Store.

You'll need the right supply outlet for your appliance.

For electric and dual fuel appliances, there needs to be a suitable outlet within 1.5 metres of the location. You'll need the right outlet, for example; a 32 amp outlet for appliances including freestanding electric cookers that consume more than 3KW. A 13 amp outlet will be required for single electric cookers and gas ignition appliances using less than 2.99KW.

If you're buying an electric cooker want us to disconnect and remove your existing gas cooker, then please let us know, as this will require a Gas Safe Registered engineer.

Check your spaces

We'll need clear access to the required location. If stairs are involved, our engineers will need the appropriate room to manoeuvre.

The chosen appliance will fit into the new space. Please note the product specification when buying, the appliance needs room both at the back and sides for ventilation.

Check your environment

When installing a new cooker, there needs to be clear space above the location. i.e., no power points, switches, boilers or sensors.

Also, no flammable materials like curtains, fabric coverings, wallpapers, shelving, wood etc.
