I am a qualified piano tuner and technician, who obtained my diploma in piano tuning and repair from Newark College - Europe's leading piano engineering school.
I am also a trained musician, with a BMus degree in Music from The University of Wales, Bangor, and an MMus degree in Music Composition from Huddersfield University. It was whilst studying for his degrees that I began to develop a love of abstract sound, and music focused upon sonic effects. It was here that I began inadvertently honing his ear to listen to sound in the way required to tune pianos. I began training to become a piano tuner shortly after completing his degree.

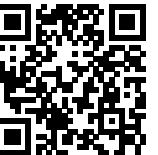

I have a particular love for the uniquely beautiful sound of the piano, and am therefore passionate about, and dedicated to, making each piano that I tune sound its very best.
A piano that is regularly tuned every six months, will usually require a fine tune. The price for this is £55.

If a piano has not been tuned for a while, then it's likely that it will have slipped significantly out of tune. In this case it will require a pitch raise (a rough tune in addition to the fine tune) in order to bring it up to concert pitch. A pitch raise costs £80. There are very rare occasions when the piano is extremely out of tune and needs two rough tunes before the fine tune, in which case the cost is £100.

I offer a £5 discount on the first tuning for new customers - just mention this advertisement.

I charge a minimum call-out fee of £25. This is what I will charge if I arrive at an appointment and nobody's home, so do always remember to note our appointments down in your diary. I will always wait for 15 minutes before leaving an appointment. If you have a customer that is late to arrive, please let me know. I will be happy to reschedule if you suspect that you will be late. Please let me know if you are in any doubt.
