The player explores immersive, prerendered environments using mouse clicks for movement.[8] By operating mechanical contraptions and deciphering codes and symbols discovered in the surroundings, the nebulously explained goal can eventually be reached.[9] The cursor changes in appearance, depending on its position on the screen and what it is hovering over, to show what effect clicking will have.[8] To navigate the world, the player simply clicks in the direction they want to walk or turn. For instance, if the player positions the cursor hand near the right or left edge of the screen, it may show a bent finger, indicating that clicking will turn the camera 180° in that direction.[8] The cursor also changes in context to show when players can drag or toggle switches, or when certain items can be picked up and carried.[10] Such items can then be examined at any time,[10][11] and either reveal clues to puzzles or provide information on the game's setting and story. As in Myst, Riven has an optional method of movement known as Zip Mode, which allows players to skip to areas already explored, but may cause them to miss important clues.[8] Whereas in Myst the objective of the game is to travel to different Ages to solve puzzles before returning to a "hub Age", Riven's gameplay takes place on the five islands of the Age of Riven. Much of it consists of solving puzzles to access new areas of the islands. The puzzles are a range of exploring, manipulating objects, and many other types of puzzles. The puzzles are often backwards.
